

Explosion-proof distribution box for China and Africa

AI Overview

Explosion-proof distribution boxes from China are available in various materials and standards, suitable for hazardous environments in both China and Africa. Types and Materials Explosion-proof distribution boxes are designed for flammable gas and dust environments, including petrochemical plants, offshore platforms, chemical, pharmaceutical, coal, and smelting industries. Common types include: Explosion-proof lighting distribution boxes Explosion-proof power distribution boxes Explosion-proof anti-corrosion distribution boxes Materials used include engineering plastics (polycarbonate, glass fiber reinforced resin), aluminum alloy, and stainless steel. Plastic boxes offer excellent corrosion resistance, lightweight design (30%-50% lighter than metal), and cost-effectiveness, making them ideal for harsh chemical or marine environments. Aluminum and stainless steel provide durability but may require surface treatment or higher costs. Standards and Compliance For international use, especially in Africa, it is crucial to select boxes compliant with global and regional standards: ATEX (Europe) and IECEx (international) for explosive atmospheres CNEX (China) aligns with IECEx for local compliance IP ratings for protection against dust and water ingress Zone classifications: Zone 1 and Zone 2 for explosive gases, Zones 21 and 22 for flammable dust Temperature groups: T1-T6 depending on the application These standards ensure safety, reliability, and regulatory compliance in hazardous areas. Applications Explosion-proof distribution boxes are used for: Power and lighting distribution Motor control (start, stop, forward/reverse) Overload, short circuit, and under-voltage protection Central signal processing and control systems They are suitable for offshore oil platforms, oil tankers, chemical plants, grain storage, ports, and metal processing facilities.
