

LC Fiber Optic Adapter Low Temperature Export Price

AI Overview

LC fiber optic adapters for low-temperature applications are available from multiple suppliers, with export prices typically starting from factory-level quotations in the range of a few dollars per unit, depending on quantity, type, and shipping terms.

Product Overview LC fiber optic adapters, also known as mating sleeves or couplers, are used to connect two fiber optic cables with minimal insertion loss and high precision. Low-temperature variants are designed to maintain performance in extreme environments, ensuring stable signal transmission and durability. These adapters are available in single-mode and multimode, simplex, duplex, and quad configurations, with sleeves made of zirconia or bronze for enhanced thermal stability.

Export Pricing

Factory Prices: Suppliers like KOC Communication Co., Ltd. in Shenzhen, China, offer LC quad optical fiber adapters with low insertion loss at competitive factory prices. Exact pricing depends on order volume, customization, and shipping method.

Bulk Orders: Export prices generally decrease with larger quantities. For example, a small order may cost several dollars per adapter, while bulk shipments can reduce the unit cost significantly.

Quotation Process: Most manufacturers provide a custom quote upon request. You can contact them via email or phone to receive a detailed price list and shipping estimate.

Shipping and Export Considerations

Shipping Charges: Costs depend on shipment size, weight, and delivery method. Manufacturers typically provide shipping quotes after confirming order details.

Payment Terms: Common terms include T/T 30% deposit and 70% before delivery, with photos of products and packaging provided before final payment.

Lead Time: Standard delivery is usually 5-7 working days after receiving advance payment, but this may vary based on quantity and customization.
