

Price of Cable Tray

AI Overview

Cable trays typically range from $20 to $200 per 10-foot section, depending on type, material, and size.

General Pricing

Wire Mesh/Basket Cable Trays: These are commonly used for data and communication cables. A 10-foot section can cost $50–$150, depending on width, depth, and finish (galvanized, powder-coated, or painted) as listed by Platt Electric Supply and Grainger.

Ladder Cable Trays: Designed for heavy-duty power cables, ladder trays are generally more expensive, ranging from $100–$200 per 10-foot section, depending on steel type and coating.

Under-Desk or Small Cable Management Trays: For home or office setups, smaller trays (1–4 feet) are available on Amazon and eBay for $20–$50.

Factors Affecting Price

Material: Steel, stainless steel, aluminum, or pre-galvanized steel affect cost. Stainless steel is the most expensive.

Size: Wider and deeper trays cost more due to additional material.

Finish: Powder-coated or painted trays are pricier than bare metal.

Accessories: Fittings, connectors, and brackets add to the total cost.

Supplier Notes

Platt Electric Supply offers a wide range of straight sections and ladder trays with detailed specifications.

Grainger provides wire mesh trays with customizable lengths and fittings for industrial installations.

Graybar requires ZIP code input to view pricing, indicating location-based pricing.

Amazon and eBay offer smaller or modular trays suitable for home or office use, often with free shipping.

For accurate budgeting, it is recommended to check supplier websites with your ZIP code or request a quote for bulk orders, as prices can vary by region and quantity.
