

Price per kilometer of ordinary optical fiber core

AI Overview

As of mid-2026, the average price of single-mode optical fiber per core per kilometer ranges from approximately $5.50 to $9.70, depending on fiber type and market conditions. Current Market Pricing Standard G.652.D fiber is averaging around $5.50 per core kilometer, with some quotes reaching $6.90 due to supply constraints and high demand. Specialty G657A2 fiber, commonly used for bend-insensitive applications, is trading between $8.30 and $9.70 per core kilometer in the spot market. The $25 per kilometer figure sometimes cited reflects spot market volatility for immediate delivery of G657A2 bare fiber, influenced by urgent projects in AI, data centers, and military applications.

Factors Affecting Price

- Fiber Type: Single-mode fibers (G.652.D, G657A2) are more expensive than multi-mode fibers due to higher performance and longer transmission distances.
- Installation Method: Underground deployment with trenching is significantly more costly than aerial or indoor installations, adding $10,000–$30,000 per kilometer for installation in complex terrains.
- Core Count: Higher strand counts increase the per-kilometer cost proportionally; a 1-core fiber is cheaper than a 24- or 288-core cable.
- Market Volatility: Global supply-demand imbalances, geopolitical events, and urgent project requirements can cause daily price fluctuations.
- Protective Features: Armored or specialty fibers designed for harsh environments cost more than standard bare fibers.

Summary

For budgeting purposes, a reasonable estimate for a single-core, single-mode fiber per kilometer is $5–$10, with specialty fibers like G657A2 trending toward the higher end. Installation costs, terrain, and project-specific requirements can significantly increase the total per-kilometer cost, sometimes exceeding $30,000 per kilometer for fully deployed networks.
